Cheap air travel should be a degree at some universities, as finding good rates on plane tickets or finding a pair of clip on earrings that fit your personality, is certainly an art form. I'm not sure that I've mastered this art form, but I have certainly developed my cheap air travel skills over the years. Getting a good deal on a flight can make it that much easier to relax on your vacation, and if you didn't really want to make the trip it makes it that less painful. There is one cheap air travel technique that no one seems to know about, or furthermore want to even discuss with me at any length. Hop inside a large cardboard box with a few well-placed air holes and have a buddy send you directly anywhere you want by UPS. This is the cheapest air travel tip I've come up with, and it has saved me loads of cash. It maybe a little uncomfortable, but your odds are at least pretty good that you'll survive. Okay, now I feel like I should probably say that the above suggestion is a joke. While that is likely obvious to most people, I'm worried that some especially frugal individuals may be taking notes. Cheap air travel is always in high demand, and you never know what people will do to get it. I've heard of people doing even crazier things! All jesting aside, the best cheap air travel technique I've learned is to book in advance, and never on impulse if I can avoid it. Give yourself plenty of time and check prices often. For whatever reason, ticket prices are prone to severe fluctuation, and a patient and observant consumer can catch some great deals just by keeping an eye on them. Another thing that will of course help with cheap air travel is if you are traveling in the "off" season. Depending on where you are going, the off season changes considerably, but it is invariably the time that people are less likely to be traveling in that direction. Maybe that's the regions rainy season, or maybe its too hot there during that time. You can often book cheap flights on the fringes of these off seasons, taking full advantage of the cheap air travel and possibly catching some decent weather. I recently landed some great deals on tickets to Madrid this way, and I'm feeling like I'm on my way to earning at least an Associates in cheap air travel.
